

This hundredth issue of the Newsletter is mailed with the 1975 dues form. Please note that the cost of membership has never been increased, and you are receiving the request well after the Christmas season!

The publication of the Estey list has resulted in forty-one requests for information regarding specific organs by that Vermont firm, and your editor has been notified of three for sale. If your heart desires an Estey, cheap, contact him.

There will be no June meeting of the Club because of the annual convention of the Organ Historical Society in the New Haven, Conn., region, June 24-27. For details regarding the programs, contact Alan Laufman.

Richard Hill has arranged for the Club to be present at the annual meeting of the Brockton, Mass., Chapter of the American Guild of Organists on Sunday, May 18, 1975. Five nineteenth-century tracker organs in the Bridgewater, Mass., area will be demonstrated for us, and the occasion will very likely be a memorable excursion. The schedule is below.

- 2:30 p.m. - Unitarian Church, School Street, Bridgewater. The 2-19 1852 E. & G. G. Hook will be played by Judy Wentzell and Richard Hill. To reach the church, take Route 24 south and turn left on Route 106. In West Bridgewater continue straight on Route 28 and after going halfway around the common, turn left on School Street; the church is on the left.
- 3:15 p.m. - Church of the New Jerusalem, School and Main Streets, Bridgewater. Bill Maxwell will demonstrate the 1-10 1865 E. & G. C. Hook in the building around the corner from the Unitarian Church.
- 4:00 p.m. - Trinity Episcopal Church, 89 Main Street, Bridgewater. The two-manual c.1890 W. B. Williams organ, recently enlarged from eight to eleven ranks, will be played by Bob Roche, who has done major work on the instrument.
- 5:00 p.m. - First Parish Church, Unitarian - Universalist, East Bridgewater. The building has, under the leadership of Rev. J. Paul Rich, become a museum housing such objects as a Pullman car, guided missiles, art objects, a huge swimming pool in the basement, and a 2-12 1854 E. & G. G. Hook organ in need of restoration! Mr. Hill will demonstrate the organ and guests may wander through the exhibits. Supper at a restaurant of your choice follows the visit.
- 8:00 p.m. - Union Congregational Church, East Bridgewater. The 1884 1-8 Steere & Turner organ will accompany a concert of old American music by the Amariah Hall Singers and the Porter United Church Quartette of Brockton, the latter group rendering early Victorian anthems.

Two items in the "Mixtures" department of the last Newsletter need correction: The Johnson from St. Mary's R.C. Church, Boston, is going to the Chapel of Our Lady of Good Counsel at the Provincial Motherhouse of the School Sisters of Notre Dame, Mankato, Minnesota. Richard Hill has found more carefully printed sources and his performing group is now properly named the Amariah Hall Singers. While searching for old music, he found a nineteenth-century manuscript containing descriptions of all the organs in the Brockton area, most of which have been destroyed.

A REVIEW Ochse, Orpha. The History of the Organ in the United States. Bloomington and London: Indiana University Press, 1975. 494 pp., 38 illustrations, cloth, $22.50. Order from Indiana University Press, 10th and Morton Streets, Bloomington, Ind., 47401, Attn: V. R. Rhea.

Our Club member Orpha Ochse has produced the book we have needed for a generation. A few past attempts at a complete history of American organ-building have been comparatively unsuccessful or remain unpublished as an occasional college thesis. Most of us have long known and promulgated the unique qualities of American organs old and new, and the development of the instrument in a huge region influenced by several European cultures.

Miss Ochse's labor, the result of extraordinary research, travel and correspondence, is far more than the usual "general overview" of a subject. It is an all-encompassing but sufficiently-detailed volume that names every better-known builder and discusses with considerable insight the products of nearly all of them. Organ manufacturers of lesser stature appear only as names at the end of a chapter, but the book is without doubt now the basic reference work. It is adequate for the "general reader" and is an accurate point of departure for those more detailed studies of builders and locales which should eventually be written. Our Newsletter has been liberally quoted by Miss Ochse, who evidently appreciates the miscellaneous material in it, and is just the sort of publication that can supplement her book. Our nation has had quite enough of poorly-researched little publications on organ history, and the Indiana University Press deserves compliments for issuing a volume so carefully and enthusiastically written. It is handsomely printed and bound, and the Appendix, Bibliography and Notes are as entertaining as the text. One might wish for a few more photographic illustrations; there are a few very slight errors in facts (doubtless due to mistakes in the original sources); and just a few typographical errors are evident. But, the definite impression gained is one of extreme pleasure in reading a work that will likely not be equalled again in our lifetimes.

In five parts and seventeen chapters, Miss Ochse traces the development of our organs from the Spanish missions and British colonies to the present decade. The growth of need for, and appreciation of, the instrument in the Rural, Expanding and Industrial eras is described with stoplists and quotations from critics of the times. Miss Ochse, herself an organist and one well-acquainted with a toolbox, discusses casework, mechanism, voicing, blowing equipment, and the intricacies of early pneumatic and electric actions. The final pages of "Organs in the Twentieth Century" includes discussion of the work of builders yet alive, not a presumptuous literary effort, for future historians will appreciate a rational contemporary account of instruments in this generation.

In her General Observations and Introductions throughout the book, the author discusses the social, cultural, economic, and especially the musical developments of each period. These necessary and brief excursions into areas many of us last studied in classrooms relieves the reader from pages of solid organ history, and can help explain, for instance, why a New England organ of 1810 had no pedals. We have too long condemned the work of many builders while forgetting that they had to produce what buyers and musicians wanted, or they would simply be out of work. Miss Ochse gives adequate passing mention to reed and electronic organs.

If you appreciate the subject and do not possess a copy of The History of the Organ in the United States, your library lacks our primary textbook. Who among us has not wished that someone would demonstrate that this side of the Atlantic can publish worthy organ history? Your editor, who considers himself well-read in at least organ books and magazines in English, was gratified to find so much material in Miss Ochse's volume that was quite unknown to him. Well done, Orpha!

Yes, it is still possible to find an "unknown" old organ in the Boston area. Add to your list Barbara Owen's latest discovery, a 2-12 1889 Woodberry & Harris in the Universalist Church, Melrose, Mass.

JARDINE NEWS - from old New York musical papers:

Jardine &amp; Son.

It is not necessary to give a detailed history of the king of instruments, in order to say wherein the above builders excel. They have had a true and large success, and stand to-day in the foremost rank of American organ builders.

Mr. Jardine, senior, was quite early taught the fundamental principles of organ building in the establishment of Flight & Robson, well known builders in Europe, almost half a century ago. He (Mr. Jardine, senior) has been erecting organs in this city for a period of nearly fifty years. He was the first to bring into use here the combination movement, reversible pedals and couplers, his own pneumatic and vacuum pallets, which he says are now generally used by the London organ builders, who accord credit him with the invention, and assert it to be one of the chief modern improvements. Mr. Jardine, Sr., was the first to employ projecting or overhanging keys, now generally adopted everywhere. Also diagonal draw-stops, arranged in steps, radiating and curved pedals, as well as the important improvements of reversed bellows ribs, which is a remedy for variability of wind caused by unsteady blowing. He was the first to introduce from Paris the now well known novelties and improvements, the Vox Céleste or Angelica, the Clariana, Flute Harmonique, Flute à Pavillon, Viola de Gamba, and the Vox Humana in its most perfect form, free from the usual unpleasant nasal quality; also the Dolean, the French tremolo, etc.

Mr. Jardine first adopted in America the system of tuning in equal temperament, as also the mathematical and scientific scales of pipes of Professor Töpfer, and the simplification principle of the Abbé Vogler. In this last, the action goes direct from the keys to the wind-chest valves, which causes a quicker articulation, and remains longer in order and tune than when instruments are made on the usual complicated principle.

Jardine & Son are connected with several of the chief European organ builders, from whom they receive information of every new improvement.

Edward Jardine has a thorough knowledge of the instrument, and is considered a very good organist.

The workmen employed by this firm have both skill and experience, every department being thoroughly well overlooked by a competent foreman. Some of the largest instruments in America have been built by Jardine & Son, and have given the greatest satisfaction. They have a perfect legion of testimonials from the best organists and judges in the land. The factory is on Thirty-ninth street, between First and Second avenues.

Organs for churches in every State in the Union have been built by this old pioneer house, and remain good and sound up to this time.

They have built organs for the cathedrals in New York, Pittsburg, Mobile, etc., and have sent organs for churches to every part of the world—Mexico, West Indies, South America, etc., etc. They are bound to be abreast, if not ahead of the times.

- The Courier, June 1, 1881

The demand for church organs still keeps up, and Messrs. Jardine & Son have been obliged to refuse some very pressing orders, as they have a gigantic four-manual organ, three extra large three-manual organs and a number of two-manual organs to finish inside of four months. They are making some free reed stops for the four-manual organ on new and improved scales, producing charming effects. The organ they have just erected in the cathedral at Cienfuegos, Cuba, the gift of Mrs. Terry, has made a great sensation, and Messrs. Jardine & Son's representative was the recipient of many honors. A colored organist from the conservatory at Leipsic, named Ximenes, played it magnificently.
